

Reproductive Ethics

Reproductive Ethics touches upon issues that frequently engage social, political, and popular discourse. This year’s MacLean Center Interdisciplinary Faculty Lecture and Seminar Series will explore controversies at the intersections of scientific advances, reproductive decision-making, and profound moral and legal considerations. While Reproductive Ethics encompasses a wide spectrum of topics, this series is organized around three overarching themes: Obstetrical Ethics, Assisted Reproduction, and Family Planning and Abortion. This year’s speakers reflect a diversity of backgrounds and perspectives, and include national experts in the fields of medicine, law, and the social sciences. This series aims to encourage thoughtful discussion through lectures and seminars that will at times complement and at other times challenge each other.

This year’s series was planned by Dr. Julie Chor, Assistant Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology and Assistant Director of the MacLean Center, and Dr. Mark Siegler, Director of the MacLean Center. They received valuable guidance from experts in the field, including Dr. Frank A. Chervenak, Chair of Obstetrics and Gynecology at Weill Cornell Medicine, Katie Watson, JD, Assistant Professor in Medical Education-Medical Humanities and Bioethics at Northwestern University, and Drs. Melissa Gilliam and Debra Stulberg, from the Departments of Obstetrics and Gynecology and Family Medicine at the University of Chicago.

This series is co-sponsored by the University of Chicago’s Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology (Dr. Ernst Lengyel, Chair) and the Bucksbaum Institute for Clinical Excellence.

Thirty-Five Years of MacLean Center Ethics Seminars

In 1981, under the auspices of the MacLean Center, Mark Siegler and Richard Epstein organized a yearlong interdisciplinary seminar series on Medical Innovation and Bad Outcomes: Legal, Social and Ethical Responses. The success of that initial seminar program demonstrated that there was great interest at the University of Chicago in creating a sustainable interdisciplinary forum to discuss health-related subjects with colleagues from across campus. Each year since 1981, the MacLean Center has sponsored an annual seminar series that has examined the ethical aspects of one key health related issue. Previous topics have included: Organ Transplantation, Pediatric Ethics, Global Health, Health Care Disparities, Medical Professionalism, Confidentiality, Pharmaceutical Innovation and Regulation, Health Reform, End of Life Care, and Neuroethics. In 2016-2017, our topic is Reproductive Ethics.
