Gravitational waves, predicted by Einstein a century ago, have become a new way for humanity to look at objects and events in space. In this talk, I will introduce gravitational waves and give an overview of what we have learned from detecting gravitational waves with the LIGO and Virgo interferometers. I will also describe recent techniques that my collaborators and I have developed to model gravitational waves and electromagnetic spectra using expensive simulations and Gaussian process regression.